

Q1:

The following clinical presentation/ syndromes are common for chikungunya infection EXCEPT

- A. Fever and rash
- B. Myalgia and arthralgia
- C. Headache and nausea
- D. Bleeding symptoms and shock

Answer: D

Q2:

Which of the following statements concerning Severe Complications of chikungunya infection is INCORRECT?

- A. Severe complications and death are rare but can occur among elderly patients (>65yo) and with underlying chronic medical problems
- B. Severe complications include respiratory failure, cardiovascular decompensation and neurologic involvement
- C. For travellers with fever and shock, chikungunya infection is the top priority to rule out in AED
- D. Ocular manifestations including retinitis, uveitis and sensorineural hearing loss have been described in patients with severe chikungunya infection

Answer: C

Q3:

For patients attending AED with fever and rash, which of the following statements is INCORRECT?

- A. Meningococcal infection is rare and the presentation is usually mild
- B. Patients with syphilis can present with generalized papular or maculopapular rash, including palms and soles
- C. Knowledge of the incubation period and exposure history for infectious agents are particularly helpful to determine the initial differential diagnosis
- D. Skin rash alone may not be able to distinguish between patients with dengue, chikungunya and zika infections

Answer: A